The circumstances are about as follows: Mr. William Kidnoff, who is a brakeman, took his family, in company with several other families, to Red river for a day of pleasure and recreation among the woods and upon the river. After setting out the hooks and roaming among the woods un-thi they became thred, Mr. Kidnoff took his family, wife, little daughter, six years of age, and son, of rine, for a boat ride. Everything went smoothly until Mrs. Kidnoff tried to gather some flow ers on the banks of the Indian Territory and fell into the water, and at the same time overturning the boat. Her husband immediately rescued her and carried her to the bank of the Territory, and then turned to save his beloved little ones, The water was over his head, but he suc occided in reaching the little boy, Oscar, without much trouble. Little Zonia, however, fared worse, by being wasned down the stream, and was fast sinking for the last time when the already tired father reached her. The water being so deep, and he having on his boots, he lost his hold twice on his little dailing, and when she was finally brought to the land was unconscious.
